

Statement of the Case.

real property, valued at $8000, had been annulled, and the answer of the defendant was framed not only to present a legal defence against the claim for rent, but also to obtain a decree affirming the continued validity of the contract of sale. It was held that the effect of the judgment in that particular case was an adjustment of the legal and equitable claims of the parties to the subject of the suit, which was the title to the land under the contract.

Upon the whole, it appears to us that we have no jurisdiction of this case, and that the writ of error should be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE LAMAR and MR. JUSTICE BREWER dissented.

FURRER v. FERRIS.

APPEAL FROM THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

No. 296. Argued April 13, 1892. — Decided May 2, 1892.

The findings of a master in chancery, concurred in by the court, are to be taken as presumptively correct, and will be permitted to stand unless some obvious error has intervened in the application of the law or some important mistake has been made in the evidence, neither of which has taken place in this case.

Crawford v. Neal, 144 U. S. 585, affirmed and applied.

THE court stated the case as follows :

In 1887, appellee was in possession of the property of the Toledo, Columbus and Southern Railway Company, as receiver, having been duly appointed such receiver by the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, in a foreclosure suit brought by the American Loan and Trust Company. On October 15, William Furrer, a young man of about twenty-one years of age, driving a load of wood along the public highway, crossed the railroad track, and while making the crossing was thrown from the wagon, struck by the wheels and instantly killed. On December 15, appellant, the administrator of William Furrer, filed his intervening petition in said Circuit Court, seeking to recover ten thousand dollars damages, on the ground that the death of his intestate occurred through the negligence of the receiver in failing to keep the crossing in good repair. The matter was referred to a master, who took testimony and reported it to the court, together with his conclusion that there was no negligence in respect to such crossing, and, therefore, no liability on the part of the receiver. This report was confirmed by the Circuit Court, and the intervening petition dismissed. From that decision petitioner appealed to this court.

Mr. Orville S. Brumback for appellant.

Appellant's case was heard below before a special master, and is one of those too numerous instances where a party is substantially denied a jury trial by reason of the personal injuries complained of being inflicted while a railroad is being operated by a receiver.

The system of watered stocks and excessive bonded indebtedness employed in railroad manipulation, has resulted in the Federal courts being called upon to frequently operate railroads through receivers, for whose carelessness the remedy to be had is only through the favorable attitude of a special master.

That the Federal Constitution as well as those of the several States intend to guarantee to every citizen a fair and impartial trial by jury is unquestionable. And the fact that the equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts has substantially abridged that right in requiring cases like appellant's to be heard by a special master rather than a jury is none the less reprehensible because it is founded upon the implied authority of the judiciary.

The injustice that has resulted all over the country by reason of this practice undoubtedly led to the enactment of the late statute, authorizing receivers to be sued and a trial before a jury had without the permission of court; but it does not go far enough to remedy all the evil, by requiring the receivers' court to submit all questions arising upon cross-complaints (such as appellant's) to a jury for determination. Jones v. East Tenn. Va. & Ga. Railroad, 128 U. S. 443.

Mr. A. W. Scott for appellee.

MR. JUSTICE BREWER delivered the opinion of the court.

As this intervening⁵ petition was filed nearly a year after the passage of the act of March 3, 1887, (24 Stat. 554,) authorizing suits against receivers without leave of the court appointing them, it is evident that the petitioner preferred to not exercise his right to a common law action and a trial by a jury, but rather to come into a court of equity and have his rights there determined according to the rules and practice of such courts. In view of such election, we fail to appreciate his counsel's complaint of the law in not driving him to a forum which he so carefully avoided.

The gist of this controversy was the alleged negligence of the receiver in failing to maintain a reasonably safe crossing. This presented mainly a question of fact. Upon the testimony, both the master and the Circuit Court found that there was no negligence, and, while such determination is not conclusive, it is very persuasive in this court. In Crawford v. Neal, 144 U. S. 585, 596, it was said:

"The cause was referred to a master to take testimony therein, 'and to report to this court, his findings of fact and his conclusions of law thereon.' This he did, and the court, after a review of the evidence, concurred in his finding and conclusions. Clearly, then, they are to be taken as presumptively correct, and unless some obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious or important mistake has been made in the consideration of the evidence, the decree should be permitted to stand. Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U. S. 512; Evans v. State Bank, 141 U. S. 107."
